

Maricopa County, Arizona is the sixth of a series of books on Mines of the American West. Containing over 1,325 entries, Maricopa County and others will consolidate data on historical and modern mines in the county, for the use of small miners, "rockhounds", metal-detector enthusiasts, hikers, campers, off-roaders and others. Modern GPS coordinates have been associated with most records to allow the reader to do a little "prospecting from their computer", using available on-line tools such as Google Earth. In this book a number of the mine locations have been reviewed using Google Earth and the results are included in a Comment section at the end of the entry. This tool allows the reader to pursue their interests when the weather is bad or they only have limited blocks of time. It also will allow the reader to maximize their use of time when they can physically visit the areas.
