

At last... the hilarious sequel to The Taming of the Bastard! Yes, Sam and Millie are back, along with all their friends from the first book and a few new ones. And this time, they're planning a wedding. Sam has popped the question and Millie has agreed... well, in theory. All she wants is a sunset ceremony in Kings Park with a tasteful reception afterwards. It doesn't take her long, however, to realise that there are expectations surrounding these nuptials and none of them are hers. Sam's money might be able to buy Millie anything she wants but she never pictured herself as a minor celebrity. From small and elegant, Millie watches as her wedding spirals into out of control tacky. Hideous invitations, cinderella coaches and a fifteen thousand dollar wedding cake are enough to stress Millie to the tip of her glitter sandals. No one seems to care. Not even Sam. There's also the added stress of Sam's mother and sister, who see her as unsuitable and will do almost anything to get rid of her. A wedding on the beach in Bali would have been so much easier.
